

Does anyone still
remember the name
Carl McIntyre? As
in, the reverend Carl McIntyre?

Or, perhaps, does
"the 21st century
reformation hour"
jog any memories
loose up there in D.C.?

Your predecessors
pulled McIntyre's
radio station
license over stunts
similar to Sinclair.

Granted, the Fairness Doctrine is no longer around,
but you'd have to be a fool not to act on egregious violations
such as when the nation's largest television
conglomerate plans
to pre-empt prime time for a blatantly
partisan program
paid for and created
at the explicit direction of management.

Sinclair Broadcasting is an excellent example of why further
weakening localism rules has been (and continues to be) a terrible idea. It shows why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard.

So let's show some life in those Portals! You are,
after all, charged
with acting in the public interest.
Now's your big shot
to actually do it.

Thanks for listening.
